Saurabh Chandra, MBBS, PhD
Chief Telehealth Officer, Center for Telehealth
University of Mississippi Medical Center

Objectives:

1. Report understandings of the basics of the rpm program
2. Explain different types of rpm programs and data supporting them.
3. Identify the impact of rpm program on healthcare spending.

Dr. Saurabh Chandra, is the Chief Telehealth Officer of the Center for Telehealth at the University of Mississippi Medical Center. The Center for Telehealth is one of the only two federally designated centers of excellence for Telehealth in the country.

After completing medical school in India, Saurabh completed his PhD in Life Sciences in the US followed by a research post-doctoral fellowship at the Cincinnati Children's Hospital and Medical Center. This was followed by clinical training in Internal Medicine and Critical Care, the latter from the prestigious program at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center. While working as a Tele ICU physician, Saurabh developed a passion for Telehealth as a transformative modality for delivering cost effective health care. Previous to his current role, Saurabh was the enterprise wide Medical Director of Telehealth at the largest health system in the state of New York where he oversaw the clinical implementation of Telehealth programs in the acute and post-acute care settings including critical care, hospitalist medicine, stroke and skilled nursing as well as leading the Tele critical care response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

When not busy implementing clinical programs, Saurabh enjoys introducing Telehealth to medical students, residents and fellows for the continuous growth of the field by the next generation of clinicians and leaders.
